

The dev guide to Wellington

So you want to get out from behind a laptop for some fresh air? Lucky, Wellington has a whole lot of that. Here's a map to guide you to all the best stuff. Enjoy.

www.xero.com/wellingtondevs

TASMAN SEA

WELLINGTON

SOUTH PACIFIC OCEAN

If you just had to google Wellington, you'll see that we're the capital of New Zealand. That might sound forever away, but really it's like a mini global city. We're home to national government, world-class tech and film industries and incredibly diverse landscapes.

It's kinda nice being tucked away in a windy little corner of the Southern Hemisphere. Our home, often called the coolest little capital in the world, is an incubator for innovation.

If you ask a Wellingtonian how long it will take to get somewhere, it's never longer than 20 minutes. The city is compact with trains, buses or a mere stroll between work and home. That means you can leave your desk and be asking the kids to get their elbows off the table in under half an hour.

Close to half of the 500,000 residents are based within Wellington city itself, with the remaining half living in various centres around the region, all within a short commute to the city.

